JOHN A. WEYER,

The Women in arms.

WASHINGTON, OHIO, Aug. 9, 1855. One of our citizens, an eminent professjonal man, with an interesting family is when soher, an excellent neighbor and kind to his family. But when intoxicating drinks can be had be must have them, and when under their influence, he becomes utterly unmanareable. On this subject delicacy will permit nothing more to be said than is absolutely necessary. But lately he has procured liquor from various persons and when he was unable to leave the house, it was carried to him by things, not men. His daughters have urged, entreated, begged, plead with these But I presume you will not complain, if in persons to fornish their father with no more your Olivers.
